What does the text say?	Means	Matters
Despite all the negative things happening like the holocaust Anne still thinks that people are still really good at heart.	The author means that she still ^{sees} sees the good in people even after being dehumanized.	• Why does this information matter? • Why is this significant? • What are the implications or consequences of the information? • How does this connect to other ideas? This connects ideas because even after the struggles she's been through she doesn't completely think they are bad people. This information matters because by believing people are good she keeps hope and can spread it to others in a time of disaster.
